

Patrolman Stops Runaway Horses; Dragged 75 Feet

When a team of frightened horses, dragging a careening wagon, plunged down Park Row early today, Patrolman John J. Murphy of the Oak Street station flung himself at the head of the near horse and brought the runaway to a halt after being carried seventy-five feet.

Hundreds of persons on their way to work rushed to doorways and stores as the cry of "Runaway!" was sounded. The horses, attached to a newspaper truck owned by the New York Evening Journal, had become frightened by the noise of the "L" while papers were being unloaded at the Brooklyn Bridge. Patrolman Murphy stopped them near New Chambers Street.

"It's a little risky, I'll admit," said Patrolman Murphy afterward, "but if you remember to run with the horses and approach from the left, throwing your whole weight on the horse's head and forcing it down, a runaway has to stop. When his head goes down he can't run far."

Hounded by Halls, Says 'Pig Woman'

justice take its course. I told it four years ago, but people did not and would not listen to me. It seemed to them as if every one connected with the case was looking for money.

"They tried to bribe me, and when that failed they threatened me, and they tried to poison my stock and burn down my home."

"They foreclosed the mortgage on my property right after the 1923 grand jury affair, and I was compelled to sell forty-one acres of land to clear the mortgage on the other twenty for less than what I paid for it."

"A few days after I sold the land the man I sold it to was offered twice what he had paid for it. When I went to get a mortgage on the property I was told by police in New Brunswick, who I know are connected with the Halls, that the property had no value."

"They have continually hounded me, but thank God, there are some honest men in the world, and money could not reach Mr. Simpson or the Jersey City officers and at last I have been allowed to tell the truth."

"I have told the truth and I am ready to die with a good, clear conscience."

(Signed) "JANE GIBSON."

Feeling Reaction

Today the "pig woman" is feeling the reaction from her severe experience as a witness yesterday. Her temperature is higher than it was yesterday, and her condition is not regarded as being as good as before she was taken to Somerville.

No mention of this was made in the official bulletin issued at the institution. This read merely: "The condition of Mrs. Gibson is not alarming."

No confirmation could be secured of a report that the six physicians and surgeons in charge of her treatment were considering the advisability of an operation. The "pig woman" was on a liquid diet yesterday and early today, but it was planned to give her some clams later.
